

To our Rock On The Range fans....

We want to address what has been a concern from our patrons regarding severe weather procedure. Weather is obviously something we cannot control, so our on-site meteorologist and first responders heavily monitor any threats in real time. There are three main conditions they're constantly monitoring: significant heavy rain, lightning, and strong winds. If any of these weather threats are headed in our direction we immediately take steps to keep everyone safe, which could include closing entry gates, stopping performances and/or evacuating the facility.

The biggest potential advantage we have to keep everyone safe is TIME. Because it takes time to calmly move tens of thousands of people to safety, we do everything we can to stay ahead of the storm threat and not wait until the threat is immediately upon us. We understand that it may seem frustrating and confusing when the skies don't look threatening at that moment. But we ask you to understand we must use that advance time to ensure your safety BEFORE the storm threat hits. It's never our preference to stop the show or inconvenience any of you by having you seek shelter or leave the facility, but we will not compromise the safety of you, the artists, or our working personnel. That will always come first for us.

We appreciate each and every one of you and we are grateful for your patience and understanding as we continue to work through a weekend of rough weather threats.
